Perspective

Recognize Generational Differences

- Professional perspective examples differ among generation, such as baby boomer, Generation X, millennials or Gen Z - each has its own beliefs about careers when looking at prospective careers. Your perspective is shaped by the time in which you grew up and the career values that your family and society taught you.
- In approaching a job interview, recognizing that people of other generations may not share your career perspective will help you interact more effectively.
- You can show your respect for the power structures and culture of a new organization and conduct yourself as a person who has researched the organization and really wants to work there. Some employees help their staff members develop career goals and objectives and overall perspectives.
